How to make homemade family feud game

If you remember watching the American television game show called Family Feud, the chances are you saw one or more of its periodic runs over the past 4 decades. From its humble beginning in the 70s to its parodic revivals over the following years, many people around the world have probably wondered if they can get their hands on a Family Feud maker or some kind! The Family Feud Template for PowerPoint allows you to mimic the gameshow using PowerPoint slides with all the fun of the original game. Make Your Own Family Feud Game in PowerPoint This PowerPoint template with Family Feud PowerPoint slides enables users to set their own questions using a ten-panel layout. You can use this template to play the Family Feud game with family, friends, co-workers or during a presentation at an event. You can use this template to play the Family Feud game with family, friends, co-workers, or during a presentation at an event or virtual game show night. Step 1: Add Your Answers to the Opening Slide The first slide in this interactive template gives panels for adding your answers to reveal later. You can use this slide to add the answers to the questions you have prepared to play the game. Step 2: Copy Answers to Create Slide with Hidden Answers Simply copy the set of answers from the first slide and Paste them using the destination theme on the third slide. Step 3: Enter Text Over Hidden Answers Select Send to Back from the right-click menu to hide your answers. You can now add the questions or numbers over the hidden answers. Step 3: Trigger to Reveal Answers on Mouse-Click Steps 1 and 2 will enable you to hide the answers to the questions and allow you to reveal them once you run the presentation in Slide Show mode. Clicking on a hidden box will show the answer, allowing you to play your game during a Live presentation. Marking Incorrect Answers with an X You can copy the X marks from the Selection Pane from the second slide and paste them using the destination theme to reveal your X marks whenever someone gives an incorrect answer. Once the X marks have been added, you can simply click the X at the bottom in Slide Show mode to reveal them. Following the simple steps above, you can make your own Family Feud game using PowerPoint. You can also get detailed guidelines regarding this Family Feud game template from the video by the developer given below. This interactive template requires a PresenterMedia subscription for download. The subscription gives you access to thousands of animated PowerPoint templates, clipart and video animations for your presentations. Go to Presenter Media – Family Feud Template for PowerPoint By Mark Keller You don't have to download the Family Feud video game to have a great time playing it. With the use of Flash technology, you can play the popular TV quiz game right in your web browser. Go to a website that has Family Feud available in Flash, such as GameFools.com and Games.com. Some sites may ask you to log in so you can get your name in the scoreboard if you win, but others allow you to play immediately. Click on the page with the Family Feud game, and wait for Flash to load the game data. Once the game has loaded, press the "Start" button. You'll be taken to the first round of the game, in which you have to guess as many answers to a single question as possible in 20 seconds. The questions are generally trivia or opinion-related, and the answers are those most often given when asked of 100 people. Type in your answer and either press "Submit" or the Enter key on your keyboard. Once you guess wrong three times, or get all the right answers, your score will be tallied and you'll be taken to the next round. Round two is the same format but with a different, possibly more difficult question. Questions range from things like, "What do people do when given a shot?" to "What is a good gift for a pirate?" When the round is finished, your two scores will be added together. The third and fourth rounds are played the same, but scores in the third round are doubled, and those in the fourth round are tripled. The last round of the game is called "Big Money." Instead of multiple answers to one question, you'll be asked five questions over the course of a minute. You'll then be asked the same questions a second time, but you have to give different answers. Your score is based on how many people replied the same way to each question as you. For instance, if your answer to a question is "Baseball," and 60 people answered "Baseball" as well, you gain 60 points. If you manage to get 200 points or more, you'll get 20,000 bonus points and win. "Family Feud" has been around for decades and has become an icon of American television history, forever associated with dueling families and its catch-phrase, "Survey says!" "Feud" debuted in 1976, one of many great game shows created by Goodson-Todman. The original host was Richard Dawson, an actor, and comedian who was at the time best known for his work on the TV series "Hogan's Heroes," as well as numerous appearances on the panel of "Match Game." Since its beginnings with Dawson at the helm, "Feud" has seen several different hosts, cancellation, revivals and a move to syndication. The show is resilient with a loyal following of fans and continues to bring new fans on board with each season it's on the air. One of the great things about "Family Feud" is that the game itself is almost the same as it was back in the 1970s, though there have been tweaks and game changes over the years. You could flip on the show today and recognize it instantly, even if it's been decades since the last time you watched. Teams are made up of family members, related by blood, marriage or adoption. Two families play against each other in every game, with teams made up of five family members each. While some parts of the game have changed over the years, this is the basic format. The answers to the questions are unique in that they aren't factual "answers" at all. They are based on the answers provided by a 100-person survey panel. Contestants are challenged to come up with the most popular answers to each question, which are placed on the game board and revealed as teams provide them. Since the answers are provided by surveys, this is where the line, "Survey says!" comes from. The main game starts off with one family member from each team coming to the podium and facing off on the first question. The contestant who buzzes in first gets to provide the first answer. If that answer is the No. 1 survey response, his or her family gets control of the question. If not, the opposing contestant gets to try and provide a higher-ranking response to earn control for his or her family. The team who wins control of the question then provides more responses, one at a time. They are not permitted to consult with one another during this part of the game. If a given answer is not one of the most popular, the family gets a strike. If the team can guess all of the most popular answers on the board before getting three strikes, they win the round. If a team ends up with three strikes, control of the round goes to the opposing family. That team then has one chance to come up with one of the remaining responses on the board to win the round — if they fail, the other team gets the points. Generally speaking, four main rounds are played in each game. If there is time, two more rounds can be played, but these are sudden death "lightning rounds." The team with the most points at the end of the main game moves on to the Fast Money round. Two family members play this round. One family member stays with the host while the other disappears backstage. The first contestant is given 20 seconds to answer five survey questions, which are scored by how many people gave that same response in the survey. After the first player's scores are revealed and tallied, they are covered up, and the second family member comes out to play. The questions are the same, but this time the player gets 25 seconds to complete the round, and if an answer is repeated the contestant hears a buzzer and is asked to give another response. If the combined scores of both team members are more than 200, the family wins the grand prize. The point values assigned to each answer come from the number of people who responded with that answer in the survey. Only the most popular answers make it to the game board, so the points don't always add up to 100. The current format of the game assigns single point values to the first two rounds, with points doubled in the third and tripled in the fourth round. Each host of "Family Feud" has brought his own style to the show, though some have been better received than others. "Feud" hosts have included: Richard Dawson: 1976 to 1985, 1994 to 1995 Ray Combs: 1988 to 1994 Louie Anderson: 1999 to 2002 Richard Karn: 2002 to 2006 John O'Hurley: 2006 to 2010 Steve Harvey: 2010 to present "Feud" lends itself well to special themed episodes and celebrity guests. There have been various celebrity tournaments throughout the years, including themed games in which the stars of television shows play against each other. There have also been competitions between sports teams and stars, students, divorced couples, musicians and game show hosts. Seasonal shows, such as the always-anticipated Halloween episode, are also popular. In 2008, NBC aired a prime-time "Celebrity Family Feud" series hosted by Al Roker. All celebrity families appearing on the show donated their winnings to charity. To learn more about "Family Feud," visit the official website at FamilyFeud.com.
